

Toronto – May 10th, 2021 - Strathallen is excited to unveil the first three exhibitions of the Wahkohtowin Art Gallery at South Hill Place, our enclosed shopping centre in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan. The Wahkohtowin Art Gallery features three separate collections in the South Hill Place corridor, and will rotate the work on display each month, portraying over 60 collections each year. The displayed exhibits are the work of Carlton Comprehensive High School students through the Carlton Collection Building program. These first three collections were painted by Jaylee Kachor-Engen, Oceanna Fisher-James, and Tynisha McKay.

Jaylee's collection commemorates the medicine wheels of North America, with specific attention to Saskatchewan. As these medicine wheels are slowly eroding, Jaylee hopes her art can capture them as they once were. As she was making this collection, she was also unearthing and learning about her own Metis ancestry.

Oceana's collection highlights people who have changed our world for the better, specifically in the areas of racism and discrimination. Her artwork also involves kids in her community, as she asked them to paint the background for some of her paintings. She hopes that her art will inspire kids today to believe they can attain anything.

Tynisha's collection titled 'Hope' aims to embrace the uniqueness of every individual. She hopes that people can embrace their differences and find places where they feel accepted. She also hopes this collection inspires compassion for self and others.

At the unveiling of the gallery, members of the community were also present such as Prince Albert Mayor Greg Dionne, Carlton art teacher and mentor Melanie Mirasty, and owner of Safeway Wes Erlendson. Strathallen is both honoured and humbled to be a part of the Wahkohtowin Art Gallery as a partner of Carlton Comprehensive.
